REPUBLIC SPECIAL Chicago, April 2.—Samuel Essenberg, a sequitial of Nan Patterson. Jewish tailor, who says he saw the Young-Patterson cab tragedy in New York, expressed his willingness to-day to go to New York and testify to what he Ensemberg identified from a number of photographs a picture of Nan Patterson, as that of the woman he saw in the cab. He is sure he cannot be mistaken, and will be able when he gets to New York to say positively when he sees her. whether Nan Patterson is the woman he saw with the man in the cab.

Knowing nothing of the previous character of Eissenberg, the local police are disposed to give him credit for his story. His explanation that he had just come from Russ's, that he did not know the ways of the American police, or the nature of the laws, and that he could not read or speak English, is considered sufficient reason for his not sooner making known his alleged knowledge of the tragedy. Morcover, he said he was given to understand by the crowd which gathered sister will have to go back to their old Every movement of the woman, according to his version, indicated she was trying to prevent the man from carrying out some plan he had in mind. She seemed to be trying to hold the man's hands.

The authorities here believe that if Eissenberg is telling the truth at all, he must have seen the Young-Patterson affair material of some other incident.

They attach the greatest importance to the statement that the revolver was in the man's hand. If Eissenberg can establish this fact to the satisfaction of a jury, they

"I feel happler now than I have in a long time." said Nan. "I felt lost without the companionship of my sister."

The new privilege will be allowed them only so long, however, the Warden says, as no illness breaks out among the women. If illness does occur Nan and her sister will have to go back ig their old quarters. To-day being Good Friday, the two women attended services in the Presbyterian chapel.
